Application Guidelines for M.A. Program / Ph.D. Program
Graduate Program on Global Society
Graduate School of Arts and Sciences
The University of Tokyo

Program Overview

The Graduate Program on Global Society (GSP), which was launched in 2012, focuses on the theme of human existence in the age of globalization and seeks to cultivate the agenda-shaping and problem-solving leadership demanded by our multipolar world.

Advances in science and technology require that we question our perspectives on the political, legal, ethical, and ecological dimensions of the human condition. In order to address the challenges of this reality and take advantage of the possibilities that it offers, GSP has developed a program dedicated to exploring the complex relation between law and governance, forging new avenues of multilateral cooperation, and identifying alternate ways of structuring societies in our increasingly global and interdependent world.

GSP is a comprehensive program designed for students interested in crossing the disciplinary boundaries between the humanities and social sciences. Its focus centers upon modern Japanese and Asian societies and the experiences of modernity particular to them. The Program, however, also places such experiences in a wider, comparative contextual framework and, in so doing, sheds light on the diverse and interdependent nature of global society.

The working language of the program is English, but the language and style of communication may vary according to individual courses and interests. All courses offered in GSP are open to students affiliated with the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences, as well as other graduate schools and programs within the University. GSP students have access to courses offered by other schools and programs in the University system, contingent upon the demonstration of language competency.

Programs

M.A. program

Our M.A. program is tailored to students in the humanities and social sciences who are interested in the political, social, ecological, cultural, or ethical aspects of human existence in global society. It features curriculum that is designed to promote: 1) further understanding of the changing socio-cultural landscape in Japan, in Asia, and around the world; and 2) cultivation of the skills needed to shape agendas and solve problems in our current era of globalization.

Ph.D. program

Our Ph.D. program is designed to develop highly qualified researchers capable of making original contributions to scholarship in the humanities and social sciences. Students are expected to conduct independent research focusing on political, social, ecological, cultural, and/or ethical aspects of human existence in a multipolar world. The program is particularly suited for those students who wish to pursue a career as a researcher or professional in fields related to the study of global society.

GSP students will be concurrently enrolled in GSP and one of the four departments of the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences: Language and Information Sciences; Interdisciplinary Cultural Studies; Area Studies; or Advanced Social and International Studies. Students must follow GSP curriculum guidelines, however, in order to meet their degree requirements.
